In Gerald E.J. Tyne's "Saga of the Vacuum Tube" there is plenty of documentation and pictures of Japanese electron tubes made in the 1920s and 1930s although the makers are in most cases not identifiable. They fought a war with vacuum tubes just like we did. The basic technology antedates the 12AX7 by about fifty years.

This is not, of course, a new work. The last revision was, I believe, in 1977.

As one who grew up through the early days of the vacuum tube, and in the writing of a book covering, in part, that history, I though it was high time to read the "famous" and "authorative" Tyne book.
