Start with No, by negotiation coach Jim Camp, is a tenaciously contrarian guide to the art and science of give-and-take that proposes a viable alternative for today's prevailing "win-win" approach. Beginning with an inverse premise--that having the right to say "no" and veto any agreement is actually the key to favorably concluding the various deals and transactions we face every day--Camp's procedure counters the common emotion-based urge to compromise ("a defeatist mind-set from the first ...

A Yes at the beginning of a negotiation is not too good an idea as things still change over the course of time. A Maybe on the other hand will drive the other side crazy, but it will drag negotiations out for a long period, which wastes valuable time and money. A No on the other hand makes the other side think.
